One noticeable feature in construction has been the scarcity of accidents, particularly fatal ones, among the workmen. But two workmen have lost their lives during the past two years; a remarkable fact, when the nature of the work is considered and the large number of workmen employed. It is not often that workmen are so exposed to cold and heat, to winds and storms, as they have been in the construction of this bridge; and it is due them to say that, as a body, they have done their duty faithfully, and they may ever look on this work as a monument of their skill and endurance.

We now leave the completed work to the care of the Directors, hoping it will prove to the Company a pecuniary success, and to the public a great convenience.
