neck, so as to allow free passage of the rope over all supporting sheaves. An iron rod with a weight at the end, fastened to the hub of the wheel, keeps it in vertical position and prevents it being upset by the wind. Each working rope carries two traveling sheaves placed so, that one is at the New York anchorage,