Top plate, but is composed of two pieces, with strips of iron uniting the two at equal intervals along the chord. This gives the painter access to the interior of the chord. The lower chords are one hand in length and are composed of eye-bars connected by pins. The proper form and dimension of the eyes, and the proper size of the pin has been the subject of considerable experiment.