1926

BEHRE, CHARLES H., JR. Observations on Structures in the Slates of Northampton County, Pennsylvania.
A description of the secondary structures observed in the Martinsburg slates of Northampton County, Pennsylvania.

LAURY, PRESTON ALEX., and others. The Scotch Irish of Northampton County, Pennsylvania.
Almost exclusively historical and biographical. A few geographic notes.

Contains descriptions of the raw materials and the processes of manufacture of portland cement in the Lehigh District.

MILLER, B. L. Taconic Folding in Pennsylvania.
Evidence presented to prove period of orogenic activity at close of Martinsburg deposition and pronounced unconformity between Martinsburg and Shawangunk formations.

1927

BEHRE, CHARLES H., JR. Slate in Northampton County, Pennsylvania.
An exhaustive account of the stratigraphy, structure and economic features of the slate region of Northampton County.

Contains a cut of the Delaware Water Gap accompanied by a brief description.

STOKE, GEORGE W., and JONAS, ANNA L. Ordovician shale and associated lava in southeastern Pennsylvania.
Discusses the stratigraphic relations and fossils of the Leesport cement rock at Nazareth and the buntzian limestone areas north of Scranton.

STOKE, GEORGE W. Possible Post-Cretaceous Faulting in the Appalachians.
Suggests the correlation of the Kittatinny and Schooley penepelines. The greater elevation of the penepeline on Kittatinny Mountain as compared with the one developed on Scott and Schooley Mountains (K. J.) is explained by normal faulting in post-Cretaceous and pre-Harrisburg penepeline time.

1928

BEHRE, CHARLES H., JR. Geologic Factors in the Development of the Eastern Pennsylvania Slate Belt.
Describes particularly the structural features of the Martinsburg slates of the Lehigh slate district.

DONEHOO, GEORGE P. A History of the Indian Villages and Place Names in Pennsylvania.
230 pp., Harrisburg, 1928.
Considerable geographic information concerning Northampton County. Topics discussed include Forks of the Delaware, Delaware Water Gap, the Delaware Indians, Lehigh River, Hokendauqua, Monocacy, Nolanamituck, Saucon, Walking Purchase and Welagamika.