BIBLIOGRAPHY

1932

A concise account of the stratigraphy, structure, petrology and economic geology.

Contains a mass of useful information concerning the Lehigh River.

Says there was a large Shawnee village where Easton now is located.

Descriptions of the Delaware and Lehigh Rivers and the Lehigh Canal.

Describes the physiographic divisions represented in Northampton County. Includes a geologic section at Delaware Water Gap.

Various physical properties of 45 specimens of slate from different slate companies in Northampton County were determined and general conclusions stated.

MATHER, KIRTLIEF F. Old Mother Earth. 177 pp., Cambridge, 1932.

Brief description of the origin of the Delaware Water Gap.

Believes that the Triassic conglomerate in the southwest portion of Northampton County is of Brunswick age.

A concise description of the geology, history and processes of manufacture.

Reprint of some newspaper articles published in 1883. Describes the Delaware River in its passage along Northampton County (pp. 493-506).

Several descriptions or brief references to the Delaware Water Gap. Three cuts of gap, strata exposed and glacial grooving; Lehigh Gap mentioned and cut of slate strata exposed. Also mentioned in first edition, 573 pp., New York, 1897; and second edition, 816 pp., New York, 1907.